Sheridan Center Survey on Teaching at Brown

The 20th anniversary of the founding of the Harriet W. Sheridan Center for Teaching & Learning will be celebrated in 2007. The Center was established for the benefit of the Brown teaching community, faculty, graduate and medical students. In order to ensure that the Center continues to develop programs, services and publications which meet the pedagogical and professional development needs of its constituents, an online survey on resources for supporting teaching at Brown was sent to all Brown faculty and graduate students between November 6th and 20th, 2006. There were two separate surveys done: one of faculty (including regular faculty and postdoctoral fellows), and one of graduate students. A total of ninety-two (92) faculty and one hundred two (102) graduate students responded. During the next month, the Center will process the survey results.

We want to thank all of you who took the time to respond to the survey - the results will help the Center staff to assess its activities and plan strategically to develop new ones.

STILL TIME TO RESPOND!

If you did not respond to the survey but are still interested in completing it, we urge you to do it today and we welcome your feedback. The url for the faculty survey is:
