Amidst freezing temperatures, snow flurries, random bouts of high wind, and occasional beams of sunlight, BMO executed better than any other tournament so far. Yale Cup proved to be exactly what we expected: some mild, some medium, and some stiff competition. While the close scores may raise some eyebrows, BMO knows its capability of dominating any team if discipline on the mark, constant focus from the sidelines, and mental toughness are prevalent. One player who particularly dominated was Captain Ben Saper with his speed and agility, as well as owning his man with his brain and his body. BMO saw much improvement with the dump-swing offense; however, we still need to improve our marks by being smarter and working harder.

Special thanks to Andy Miller's parents for letting a bunch of the BMO players crash at their place and eat their food—your hospitality is so appreciated! Also, much gratitude to all the other parents, friends, and girlfriends who came out to yell, cheer, and support BMO, despite the freezing temperatures and bleak conditions. We really appreciate it!

It's finally here: the UPA 2007 College Series. The first of three tournaments will begin this weekend at the University of Rhode Island, where Brown's A, B, and C teams will be competing for a bid to Regionals in early May. How has your ultimate game been improved while being injured for the first half of the season, and therefore unable to play?

Watching from the sidelines has helped me improve on my cutting timing, especially of dump and swing continuations. It's something that's so obvious when you're watching the whole field but not as obvious when you're playing every point.

Why will BMO succeed this Spring 2007?
We'll be successful because our team is the fastest it's been in all my three years of Brown ultimate. Our track workouts are ridiculous. Once we get our timing and flow down, we'll use our raw athleticism to be dangerous.
