DEGREES WITH DISTINCTION AND AWARDS

The Department of Computer Science recommends for graduation with academic honors those students who have completed a high-quality thesis and have received mostly A's in courses used for the concentration. The University may award baccalaureate degrees magna cum laude to the upper 20% of the graduating class, as determined by the Committee on Academic Standing. The list above includes all students being recognized today, including those who are receiving diplomas at other departments' ceremonies, those who graduated last December, some of those who are one or two courses shy of completing their degree, and those who have elected not to participate in today's ceremony.

The Susan Colver Rosenberger Prize was established in 1919 by Jesse L. Rosenberger as a memorial to his wife, who was the daughter of Charles K. Colver, of the class of 1842. The Department of Computer Science recommends students for this award in recognition of academic excellence and service to the department. This year, the students being recognized for academic excellence are David Eustis, Stephanie Lee, and Michael Tschantz, and for service are Vesselin Arnaudov, Sarah Bell, and Danielle Karr.

You are cordially invited to join us at the Computer Science Department for a reception honoring today's graduates. Please follow us back to the 3rd and 4th floors of the Thomas J. Watson Sr. Center for Information Technology at 115 Waterman Street.
