

“BORROWING MATERIAL FROM OTHER LIBRARIES”
Brown University Library
Video Transcript

ANDY: Alright. I was pretty skeptical at first, but I’m finally convinced. The Brown University Library System is the greatest thing ever created by man.

BRITTANY: What if Brown doesn’t have what you’re looking for?

ANDY: Psh. Come on, now. With over 3 million books, journals, documents, and electronic resources, how could they not have what I’m looking for.

BRITTANY: It could happen.

ANDY: Why do you do this to me? Why?! You wait for me to say something and then you go on and on about how wrong I am. Well get on with it.

BRITTANY: If Brown doesn’t have what you’re looking for, you can get it from somewhere else. And if you use Brown’s free services, you can borrow materials from all over the United States and beyond.

ANDY: Wow. Space books.

BRITTANY: No. I meant... Never mind. From the library homepage, click on “more borrowing options.” Here, you’ll find multiple ways to borrow materials. Next to each option is an average of how many days it will take for you to get your book or article. Some of the faster options include InRhode, for books in Rhode Island, Virtual Catalog, for books in Massachusetts, and BorrowDirect, for books from all of the other Ivy League Universities.

WARNING VOICE: (read very fast) Does not include Harvard.

ANDY: What did that voice over say?

BRITTANY: Ah... nothing.
