Blogs are websites where students and instructors can self-publish writing and media. They can be used to help students reach learning goals in your course, including improving student writing, cultivating community, jumpstarting discussion, and promoting engagement with the ideas of the course outside of the classroom. BrownBlogs offers blog sites based on the WordPress blogging platform to Brown users.

Ideas for using blogging in your course and evaluating its impact can be found in these resources:

- Learn how to develop and implement a course blog
- Explore when and why to use a course blog
- See ideas for using blogs as learning tools
- View options for integrating, managing, and evaluating individual and group blogs
