This paper explains how Apuleius uses the discourse of animality to defend his varied intellectual activity in the competitive world of Second Sophistic performance. By focusing on how he recycles and reworks well-known discussions of animals in the Greco-Roman literary tradition, we will explore how Apuleius distinguishes and dignifies his voice as a necessary link in the chain of transmission from Plato to his contemporary audience.