The Craig M. Cogut Visiting Professorship in Latin American and Caribbean Studies brings leading scholars from Latin America and the Caribbean to teach and conduct research at Brown University. Visiting Professors are based at the Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies and teach one undergraduate course on Latin America per semester, advise undergraduate and graduate student theses, and give presentations in Center or affiliated departmental seminars. The Craig M. Cogut Visiting Professorship provides a stipend, an optional medical insurance package, financial assistance with round-trip travel from home country, and administrative assistance. Appointments are possible for one or two semesters.

Brown faculty members are invited to encourage applications and submit names of potential candidates to the Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies. Applications should include: (1) a letter of nomination from the CLACS-affiliated Brown Faculty member, if appropriate; (2) a letter of introduction from the applicant indicating the area of expertise and the proposed length of stay; (3) a current C.V.; (4) relevant syllabi of courses taught; and (5) the proposed course or courses that the Visiting Professor would like to teach with syllabi or detailed course outlines.

Applications and names should be submitted electronically to: Kate_Goldman@brown.edu.
