An Introduction to Constitutional Law

The Casebook book for this course will be the Second Edition of: Paulsen, Calabresi, McConnell, and Bray, The Constitution of the United States (2nd ed. Foundation Press 2013). You really will need to buy the Second Edition of the book. It is available for purchase at the Brown Bookstore on Thayer Street. The course is open to all Brown undergraduates, including freshmen, who have not previously taken the introductory course in structural constitutional law.

There will be a ten page maximum take home mid-term exam, which I will hand out in class on Thursday, October 31 and which must be returned by 1pm on Friday, November 1st. There will also be a take home final exam which will be handed out on Thursday, December 12th, after the last class, and which will be due back by 5pm on Friday, December 13th. The final exam will contain a first half that tests you on your knowledge of the material covered in class from the November 1st midterm until December 12th, while the second half will ask you to answer an essay question that will relate to all the materials covered over the course of the semester. Class participation in the lecture-discussion is encouraged but will not affect your grade. The midterm exam will count for one third of your grade, the first half of the final exam will count for another third of your final grade, and the final exam essay question will count for the rest of your final grade. The essay is limited to no more than 2000 words.

The outline of assigned readings below is both aspirational and provisional. We may and probably will get behind from time to time.
