Healthcare Access in an Uncertain Time

A PANEL DISCUSSION: The United States spends more than any other country on healthcare, yet the return on this investment is neither reflected in our overall population health nor in equal access to healthcare across income and race. As Congress and the White House continue to debate repealing or enhancing the Affordable Care Act, what could revision mean for healthcare access for people in America? In this panel discussion, experts will try to untangle the state of healthcare in the United States with particular insights into how the launch of Medicare significantly changed access 50 years ago.

Terrie Fox Welle, Ph.D.
Dean, School of Public Health, Professor of Health Services, Policy & Practice, Brown University

David Barton Smith, Ph.D.
Emeritus Professor, Temple University
Research Professor, Health Management & Policy Department, Drexel University

2016 Goldberg Prize recipient for the best book in the area of medicine for his book:
“The Power to Heal: Civil Rights, Medicare and the Struggle to Transform America’s Health System”

Ira B. Wilson, M.D.
Professor of Health Services, Policy & Practice, Professor of Medicine, Chair of Health Services, Policy & Practice, Brown University

Chanee D. Fabius, Ph.D.
Postdoctoral Research Fellow in Health Services Policy & Practice, Center for Gerontology & Health Care Research

Thursday, September 28, 2017
5:00 - 6:30 pm
Reception to follow
IBES Auditorium
85 Waterman Street, 1st Floor
Providence, RI