

Housing Options 2020-2021

General/Overall Tips

1. Contact local colleges and universities who may offer summer housing in their residence halls. Additionally, some of these schools may also have listservs for local students looking for housing options.
2. Search through general sites (e.g. Craigslist.org or Airbnb, Uloop, sublet.com, campusrent.com, Trulia.com). Remember to always exercise caution when utilizing these sites.
3. Utilize resources from the local area--newspapers, community websites, real estate agents, etc.
4. Ask your internship/research organization-- they can often recommend housing options or at least good places to start the search. They may even know of other incoming interns who will be in the area and are also looking for housing.
5. Use your Brown network -- ask current Brown students who live in the area of your internship for recommendations of accommodations or resources, or potentially any alumni or professors with recommendations about a particular geographical area.

Find a roommate -- It can be easier to find housing as part of a group and can be more cost effective. Reach out to see whether other Brown students or friends from home will be living in the same city as you over the summer. Use apps like Housing Anywhere, Roomi (<https://roomiapp.com/>) or RoomZoom (<https://www.roomzoom.com/>) to look for potential roommates.

Important Considerations for the Housing Search Process

Always exercise caution when utilizing sites such as Craigslist to search for housing. These sites can offer some great opportunities, but there is always the potential for scams.

Be aware of the following while conducting your housing search:

- You should never send money to secure housing without viewing the property and signing a contract first.
- Never visit a property alone; always bring a friend or relative with you.
- Make sure you are also considering the neighborhood, in addition to the living space. It's important to make sure you are going to be living and traveling through areas in which you feel safe.
